

PROPERTY MANAGERS E&O

Don't let them wait until it's too late.

Property Managers are relied upon to wear the hats of many roles, but not without risk. At times they have to play landlord, accountant, rental agent, inspector, repairman, and a host of other roles. Managing residential and commercial properties while achieving expected revenues and while ensuring the satisfaction of clients and tenants is challenging.

To perform successfully Property Managers need their focus to be on taking good care of the properties they manage. Being ready for and responding to mistakes and unexpected events is critical to maintaining the continuity so important to the successful management of their client's properties. That's where McGowan's experienced professional liability team and the Property Managers E&O program can help.

WHAT IF...

- A property manager failed to report a slip and fall incident to the building's insurance carrier as the person quickly got up, brushed themselves off and continued on their way - no big deal. A few months later they receive a lawsuit. The building's insurance carrier declined for late notice and, in turn, the building owner is now suing.

OR

- A Manager refused to rent to an individual based on their handicap. The prospective tenant sued for discrimination.
